

Taking a course online requires self-motivation, organization, and teamwork with parents and other supervising adults. The most successful students understand they need to create a regular learning schedule just as if they were taking courses in a building.

Each course has a real teacher teaching it, just like brick and mortar classes. Because you are not meeting face-to-face each day, your conversations with your teachers will most often be via e-mail.

JVS students need to have contact regularly with their learning coach.

Single course students should meet regularly with their building on-site monitor.

Skype is another tool we encourage our teachers, Learning Coaches, and families to use to add a "personal" touch to the learning experience. You can meet your teacher online and discuss problems you might be having as if you WERE in the same room.

An Internet-based approach to learning uses interactive online technology and requires REGULAR, active participation in each course.

Online courses provide a rich multimedia environment with engaging, high-quality content for individualized discovery through the learning process. Students engage in dynamic learning activities which are multimedia-enforced.
